Goal

This symposium will consist of four days focused on providing information on the changing paradigms in diagnostic and therapeutic interventions as they pertain to cancer treatment and management of selected tumor types. Many of the didactic presentations and interactive case presentations with the audience are designed to highlight new information and answer controversial oncologic questions. The practitioner attending the symposium will receive the updated information from MD Anderson Cancer Center faculty and national clinical leaders. This program is intended to improve practitioner knowledge and performance, patient management and outcomes.

Target Audience

The information provided during this symposium will be beneficial to medical oncologists, hematologists, radiation oncologists, surgical oncologists, general surgeons, thoracic surgeons, internists, physician assistants, advanced practice nurses and oncology nurses involved in the care of patients with breast, colorectal, esophageal, head and neck, hematologic, non-small cell lung, pancreatic and prostate cancers.
