The Benefits of Tai Chi and Qi Gong in Your Cancer Journey

By Leslie Graham-Getty, D.C., DAOM, LAc

Tai Chi and Qi Gong are safe, gentle, fluid, mind-body practices that promote health and well-being. Originating in China, they are often referred to as “moving meditations”. They are done in a standing position and can be adapted to sitting or lying down. Both practices are easy to learn. Tai Chi tends to be longer and more choreographed while Qi Gong is composed of individual postures that are easier to remember and learn.

The overall goals of Tai Chi and Qi Gong are to synchronize the breath (Qi or Chi) with body movements all while maintaining a calm, clear state of mind. The gentle, slow, graceful movements synchronized with relaxed, deep, diaphragmatic breathing helps to relax the mind and strengthen the body.

Recent studies show that these practices have many health benefits including increased flexibility, balance, strength, and fitness and may support immune function and healthy sleep as well as relieving pain, anxiety, and fatigue.

MD Anderson’s Integrative Medicine Center offers classes in Tai Chi and Qi Gong for both patients and caregivers at the Mays Clinic location (2nd floor). Classes are free with Tai Chi on Tuesdays at 3:30 to 4:30 p.m. and Qi Gong on Thursdays from 3:30 to 4:30 p.m. (please refer to class schedule for specifics). Classes at the League City campus are offered on Wednesdays with Qi Gong at 2:30 p.m. and Tai Chi at 3:30 p.m. Videos of these practices are available in the audio video section of our website: www.mdanderson.org/integrativemedcenter.
